The Coyotes of Sausalito

Sausalito resident Jennifer Berry is a biologist who specializes in design for wildlife. Her focus has been on reconnecting migration routes, restoring streams, and preserving important wildlife habitats for redevelopment projects around the state. Jennifer has always held a passion for tracking urban carnivores, so it was a great surprise to discover upon moving to Nevada Valley that this neighborhood has its own resident family of coyotes. Even more amazing was that she'd one day be given the opportunity to work on a project to help them. In her presentation, Jennifer will share images, videos, and sound recordings to tell the story of the Sausalito coyotes and her role as their resident biologist, with a focus on how we can learn to live in peaceful coexistence with these beautiful animals.

Cows in Sausalito?

In the late 1800's Marin was the Bay Area's major supplier of dairy products, and cows were a common sight on the streets of Sausalito and grazing on the surrounding hillsides. Join Sausalito resident Mike Moyle for an exploration of this history, with a particular focus on the many small dairies that dotted the countryside, most of them operated by Portuguese immigrants. As with his recent talks "Where's Waldo?" and "The History of Caledonia Street," Mike will accompany this talk with "then" and "now" photos to highlight the dramatic changes that have occurred in and around Sausalito. Mike's presentation will be in conjunction with the Open House the following day hosted by the IDESST Sausalito Portuguese Cultural Center.
